As you read this issue of The Business View, I suspect that many of you are reflecting on the passing of the first two months of 2015 and setting about charting a course for the months ahead. The end of the first quarter is a good time to think about how much progress is being made on the goals you and your business are firmly committed to in the new year.

At the Mobile Area Chamber, we recently shared with you the productive visioning and strategic planning process that went into our Plan of Action for 2015. That process determines the course and priorities for our organization. Our goals revolve around capitalizing on our community’s traditional growth sectors such as maritime, chemicals, logistics/distribution, healthcare, energy and advanced manufacturing, as well as new burgeoning ones like aviation/aerospace and IT/high-tech. And we will continue to focus on small and minority business development and maintain our strong position as the voice of business in the Mobile region.

As in the past, we have benefited from the engagement, leadership and insight provided by our members to help determine our direction. Likewise, there is an abundance of talent on our staff and within our committees, councils, task forces and on our board of directors and board of advisors. I invite you to grab one of us after one of the many Chamber events, or sit down with us over a cup of coffee and let us know how the Chamber can help your company be successful. Great things will happen if we continue to rally around our common goals.
Increasing results by 75 percent in one year is an impressive accomplishment for any business. But when that statistic represents the progress of Mobile County’s high school graduation rate, it is progress the entire business community recognizes.

Mobile County Public Schools announced during its annual meeting with local legislators in January that the four-year, on-time graduation rate improved to 82 percent, putting the school system six years ahead of a community-wide goal to increase the graduation rate to 80 percent by 2020.

This measurement is based on freshmen who entered high school in 2010 and graduated in the spring of 2014. The 82 percent figure does not include an additional 6 percent of students who either graduated in December 2014 or who are still enrolled in school working toward graduation.

While Mobile County Public Schools Superintendent Martha Peek praised high school principals for their work, she said the school system is not stopping here. “This is one leg of the journey,” Peek said. “By 2017, our goal is to be at 90 percent.”

Here are a few examples of what the Mobile County Public School System is doing to increase the graduation rate:

- Offering a growing number of pre-kindergarten classes and innovative K-5 programs
- At-risk students for dropping out are identified as early as elementary school so early intervention techniques may be applied
- Career guidance and planning starts in middle school
- Middle and high school counselors work together to conduct high school planning sessions with all eighth-graders and their parents to develop an individual High School Plan of Study
- Multiple Pathways to Graduation include nearly a dozen career-based academies of study and the opportunity to earn college credits
- MCPSS implemented the rigorous Alabama College and Career Ready Standards, which are challenging students to achieve more and compete nationally and globally
- Struggling students have access to a variety of alternative school programs including evening study
Your financial goals are unique to you and you alone. So instead of one-size-fits-all solutions, the South Alabama division of Regions Private Wealth Management provides a team of advisors who are ready to address your specific needs with straight talk, practical recommendations and complete transparency.

Scott Pate is now joining that team as a Sales Manager, with 15 years of banking, wealth and relationship management experience.

MSN Money named Mobile among its “hottest” cities in America for 2015, based on “job and population growth, affordability, livability and the health and well-being of the residents.” It also took into account how “innovative and cool the city is.”

The story leads with the Mobile Area Chamber’s “E” Award earned in 2014, the highest designation given for enhancing trade opportunities, and predicts that “Mobile will become the Southern trading hub of the U.S.”

MSN highlights Mobile’s thriving port, expanding international trade and prime location on the Gulf Coast as additional reasons for making the list.

The list features 16 cities, and appears on the media outlets website in alphabetical order, starting with Atlanta and followed by Austin, Texas; Burlington, Vt.; Cambridge, Mass.; Denver; Detroit; Houston; Madison, Wis.; Mobile; Nashville, Tenn.; Oakland, Calif.; Pittsburgh; Queens, NY; Venice, Calif.; and Washington, D.C.

City of Mobile Mayor Sandy Stimpson used the Mobile Area Chamber as the backdrop to announce he was creating a chief procurement officer position to implement the city’s supplier diversity program. The individual chosen will report directly to the mayor and be accountable for establishing a modern, efficient and accessible procurement process based on best practices found across government and the private business sector.

Stimpson commented with the number of capital improvements coming, he felt it was critical for contractors to reflect the city’s diverse make-up.

Stimpson chose the Chamber to make the announcement because he views the Chamber as an important stakeholder in the program, particularly in the effort to identify and assist local minority, women and disadvantaged business enterprises.

Larry Dorsey of Dorsey & Dorsey Engineering spoke at the news conference. Dorsey, the Chamber’s first vice chair of minority business development, credited the Chamber’s assistance and the value of services his company provides.

Paul and Mellanie Hildesheim have built scores of homes for their clients at Gallery Homes over the past 10 years. The first one they built, however, was their own.

“Having been in commercial and industrial construction for many years, I developed a love of residential building when my wife and I decided to build our own home,” Paul said. “Learning a great deal throughout that process, we started helping other people build their own dream homes.”

Gallery Homes, the Chamber’s Small Business of the Month, started with “a couple of remodeling and new construction jobs per year.” Now the Hildesheims complete 15 to 20 projects annually. A true custom home builder, Gallery walks its clients through each step of the process, essentially allowing them to design their own home room by room.

“I am focused on providing our clients with the most structurally sound home available in today’s market and Mellanie is gifted with that eye for detail and design,” Paul said. “Once the plans are complete, we build to their specifications and work with them to choose everything from paint color to fixtures.”

Gallery Homes, members of the national and Mobile Home Builders Associations is committed to building efficient homes, as well as, it is a certified Energy Star Builder, Green Professional, Graduate Builder, and Earth Cents Builder. By meeting the more than 150 construction details necessary to earn the Energy Star designation, Gallery Homes can save homeowners up to 50 percent on their heating and cooling costs. Its designation as a Fortified Builder can help clients save up to 40 percent on homeowners’ insurance.

The company’s small size – it has only five full-time employees – helped it weather the recession, as the Hildesheims did much of the work themselves during the lean years, focusing on income-generating projects and relying on word of mouth to build their client base.

Now that the housing market is recovering, Hildesheim is bullish on the future of Gallery Homes and the Mobile market in general. “Mobile is growing,” he said. “With the state docks expansions, Airbus and Austal, along with so many other new businesses, the need for new homes is growing. Our customer base tends to want features and designs that are unique to their needs. That being said, clients who purchase an existing home are asking for extensive remodeling to make it their own, and some want it to be their unique vision from the ground up. Either way, business looks good for Gallery Homes and we are excited to be doing what we love every day.”

As a second-generation small business owner, Frank Lott’s involvement in the Mobile Area Chamber began nearly a decade ago, when a statewide legislative issue piqued his interest and he wanted to know more about the Chamber’s position on it.

“We had been a member forever, but I had never been involved,” said Lott, president of Heritage Homes. “I went to a few state governmental affairs committee meetings, and found out how much the Chamber has to offer. Most importantly, over the years, I have come to learn there is a place for everyone at the Chamber.”

Lott was introduced as chairman during the Chamber’s 178th annual meeting held in late January. During his remarks, he turned his attention to a couple of key issues for the coming year. These include supporting small and minority businesses in Mobile, including increasing opportunities to successfully compete and win contracts with larger industry; ensuring companies who invest here are sensitive to their footprint and will leave a legacy; and involving more members in committees and task forces.

On industry recruiting, he told attendees, “This is a critical year for the Chamber’s economic development team, as we close in on the Airbus assembly line’s opening. All eyes are on us these days, and we’re in a good position. Our team – including the city, the county, the port, the airport, private industry and our K-12 and higher education systems – are working together to recruit the types of industries we believe will be a net-positive in Mobile long-term, while being sensitive to their long-term impact on the environment.”

“This Chamber is committed to increasing the number of jobs for our citizens, fighting for pro-business legislation, providing value with our programs – and doing it all with a focus on excellence,” he said.

And as a final call to action, Lott said he wants anyone who is a Chamber member to find an area of interest and get involved with the Chamber. To see a listing of the Chamber’s committees and task forces, go to http://mobilechamber.com/membership/committees.
Mike Lee Presented Highest Chamber Honor – Delchamps Award

A quarter of a century ago, Dr. Sam Eichold and the Mobile Area Chamber created an award in honor of former board chairman Alfred F. Delchamps who had a passion for investing in Mobile, and raising up a community focused on giving back. The Delchamps Award was presented to Mike Lee, a former chairman of the Chamber's board of directors and president and CEO of Page & Jones.

“I could not be more honored than to present tonight’s award to a former Chamber board chair, who rather riding off in the sunset, has remained an active volunteer, relentless in his quest to secure public support of, and funding for a new bridge across the Mobile River,” past chairman Michael Chambers with Swift Biotechnology told the audience at the Chamber’s annual meeting.

When asked to describe what it is like working with Lee, a common theme rose among his peers at the Chamber – his dedication.

“It’s this dedication to the Chamber’s mission statement, to Mobile’s economy, to the local tourism industry and to a bridge that sets him apart from the rest of us,” Chambers said.

Carolyn Golson, the Chamber’s vice president of membership, remembers a meeting held right after Hurricane Katrina during which Lee said that we, as the business community, needed to open our doors to help destroyed businesses along the Gulf Coast. And he did. He offered Page & Jones services to a direct competitor in New Orleans, and transferred those customers right back to the competition after they were able to reopen.

Another example came from Ginny Russell, the Chamber’s vice president of community and governmental affairs, who said that from day one, Lee championed the bridge project and rarely misses an opportunity to speak with civic groups and elected officials on the need for a bridge and bayway expansion.

Outside of the Chamber, Lee has served as president and chairman of the Alabama World Trade Association, the Propeller Club of Mobile, the Mobile Freight Forwarders and Brokers Association, the Mobile Traffic and Transportation Club and the Mobile Bay Convention and Visitors Bureau. He is currently chairman of the Alabama District Export Council, the University of Alabama International Business advisory board, Regions Bank South Area board of directors, the Alabama French American Chamber of Commerce and the Rand Corporation’s Gulf States Policy Council.

Austal USA

With millions of dollars in military contracts and more than 4,100 employees, Austal USA’s commitment to working with minority companies is evident by the purchasing goals the company sets each year.

Austal USA was selected to receive the 2014 Rev. Wesley A. James Minority Business Advocate Award. The annual award was renamed to honor James for his role in advancing minority-owned companies.

Austal has a small business liaison who participates in procurement matching events, trade shows and training sessions, reaching out to small, disadvantaged, women-owned, Native American, Veteran and service-disabled-owned local businesses. One example is Mobile-based Rubber Hose and Gasket. With Austal’s orders, the company’s volume increased more than 30 percent, additional employees were hired and an on-site facility was set up at the Austal yard.

The company was presented the award in October at the Chamber’s Minority Business Awards luncheon. At the event, the Chamber also honored Leaf and Petal Florist & Gift Shop and Ranger Industrial Services with the Eagle Award.
Growing sales coupled with investments in technology and operational processes helped Mitternight Inc. earn the Mobile Area Chamber’s Manufacturer of the Year award.

The company was presented the award at the Chamber’s joint board of advisors and board of directors meeting in November 2014.

From its simple beginnings in 1927 as a boiler repair shop to its present status as a recognized manufacturer of vessels for the chemical, petroleum and other sectors for Fortune 500 customers, the company is also an industry leader in design, engineering and welding.

The Satsuma-based business employs 75 people, and recently achieved the international designation ISO 14001 for its focus on environmental management.

In addition, the company has invested more than $250,000 in its facility and worked with AIDT and Mobile Works to recruit and train employees.

The University of South Alabama believes entrepreneurs are the key to job creation and economic diversity, and its commitment is clear with the newly opened Coastal Innovation Hub. The Hub was recognized as the Innovator of the Year at the Mobile Area Chamber’s joint board of advisors and board of directors meeting in November 2014.

The 10,000-square-foot facility, the only high-tech incubator between New Orleans and Jacksonville, Fla., can house up to 25 start-up companies. In addition to faculty-driven companies, non-university-developed technologies account for half of the activity in its first year of existence.

Tenants have the benefit of on-site consulting, professional networks, office space, laboratories and conference rooms, along with access to university libraries and student interns, on their journey to commercialization.
State Farm Makeda Nichols Agency may be a small business, but it’s committed to using its resources to make a big impact. The agency and its employees were presented the Corporate Community Service Award at the Mobile Area Chamber’s joint board of advisors and board of directors meeting in November 2014.

It was the first time a small business earned the distinction. The staff of eight’s volunteer efforts this past year included:

- Organizing the Purse with Purpose fundraiser, started by Makeda Nichols a decade ago;
- Helping revive the Skyline and U.S. Hwy. 90 area;
- Joining in walks to support breast cancer and diabetes;
- Participating in Bellingrath Gardens’ Balloon Glow; and
- Rolling up their sleeves to help a storm-damaged church.

This award recognizes companies – both large and small – for their dedication to the community and is presented by The Junior League of Mobile and the Chamber.
Attending Mobile Area Chamber events inspired Kathy Williams, a professional recruiter with the locally owned staffing firm J.W. Legacy, to join the Chamber’s ambassador program.

In her first year as a volunteer, Williams earned the Ambassador of the Month award twice for her participation. In 2014, she assisted with ribbon cuttings at member companies, helped with Chamber networking events and visited new members. She also actively participated in the annual total resource development campaign Chamber Chase.

Williams received the Ambassador of the Year award during the Chamber’s joint board of advisors and board of directors meeting in November 2014.
At this year’s Annual Meeting, the annual report video included remarks from some Mobile Area Chamber members. Broken into four segments to parallel each core area of the Chamber’s program of work (jobs, advocacy, value and excellence), the video can be found in its entirety on the Chamber’s website at www.mobilechamber.com/in-the-news and on www.youtube.com/MobileChamber.

Here’s a sampling of what our members had to say:

JOBS

When asked why RSI (Rural Sourcing Inc.) chose Mobile, Ingrid Miller, the company’s vice president of client services, answered, “I would say the people. When we are looking at cities, there’s metrics, there’s numbers, there’s cyber salaries. But what it comes down to is the talent – the people we want to add to the RSI family. And so, in looking at all the cities, we realized we could pull not just from Mobile but from the surrounding area, and it was just a great culture.”

Travis Short, president of Horizon Shipbuilding, boasted about the Chamber’s dedication to small business development. “Whether it is the minority business group or small business group, they’re advocates for you. They are going to take charge of your needs and take charge of what you’re trying to get done. And they’ll get you there.”

Ramona Hill, the Chamber’s special project director charged with directing Southwest Alabama manufacturing community efforts, spoke of Mobile’s unique advantage. “One of the reasons our proposal won was that we are a community that collaborates. We know how to bring partners together to make significant change.”

Bonnie Tully, vice president and site manager with Evonik Industries, touted the Chamber’s efforts in helping the Mobile operation expand. “The Chamber has really partnered with us to bring business opportunities to Evonik. When we announced we wanted to be a chemical park, they actively looked for partners and brought them to us. We’re still developing the business right now, but we hope we have some announcements in the future.”
ADVOCACY

“We’re very thankful to see the Chamber involved personally with us, helping us work on an issue that is really paramount to our company,” said Rob Hackbarth, owner of Hackbarth Delivery Service.

Mike Lee, president and CEO of Page & Jones and co-chair of the Chamber’s Build the I-10 Bridge coalition, talked about the importance of the Chamber’s role in the bridge issue.

“The Chamber filled a real void in getting in and bringing the business community together with our elected officials and created a mechanism for comment from stakeholders of all kinds on both sides of the bay.”

5 Business Practices That Make You Look Small

By Barbara Weltman, guest columnist

Even though you're a small business, you don't want to act small. If you want the public to view you as one of the big boys, act like it by avoiding poor business practices. Here are five business practices to avoid.

1. Not replying to correspondence.
   Whether customers, clients, vendors and other business associates try to contact you by phone, email or text, not replying promptly is a bad business practice. It’s rude and unprofessional. Don’t let your lack of time or an incomplete answer prevent you from responding promptly. You can always follow up later with more information. Just let the sender know you’ve received the communication and that you’re attending to matters.

2. Whining about your personal problems.
   Your personal problems – health, marital discord, bad weather or the loss of key personnel – can make it difficult to keep up with your business. You may be distracted and fall behind on a job or need to delay payment to your suppliers or vendors. Recognize that everyone has a sob story, but most people don’t want to hear yours. For example, don’t let the fact that you’ve been stiffed by a customer prevent you from paying your bills on time. Find a way.

3. Relying solely on experts.
   You have to turn to experts – accountants, attorneys, insurance agents, IT pros and the like – to help you run your business effectively. But you can’t choose to remain ignorant of your obligations. Know when to seek help and what to ask for. The cost of these experts will save money by helping you avoid penalties and other costly mistakes.

4. Putting all your eggs in one basket.
   Your time and resources may be limited, but don’t focus your activities primarily on one client or customer – no matter how lucrative this may be. If that client or customer leaves you (because of its own business downturn, a better supplier or service provider comes along or for any other reason), you’ll be left scrambling to replace lost revenue. Continually market your business so there are prospects in the pipeline.

5. Making promises you can’t keep.
   You want to do your best, but don’t promise more than you can or will deliver. Don’t say you’ll return a phone call if you won’t. Don’t promise completion of a job by a certain date if you can’t make good on your word.

Conclusion
   Recognize that being a small business is no excuse for acting like someone running a hobby. Be professional and watch your business grow.

Jim Barnes Enterprises Inc.
d/b/a McDonald’s Restaurants

Company official: Jim Barnes, owner/operator and president; Kriselyn Barnes Swalley, owner/operator; Ashley Barnes McFarland, office manager; and William Barnes, owner/operator.

Years in business: Barnes began his career in 1983 in Jennings, La., where he owned and operated one restaurant. He then grew to own three restaurants in Louisiana before moving to Mobile and purchasing the Mobile restaurants in 1993. Over the years, the company has grown to 19 locations, with all of Barnes’ children joining him along the way. Currently, they employ more than 1,000 people.

Brief company description: McDonald’s is one of the world’s leading food service retailers in more than 100 countries, with more than 35,000 restaurants serving nearly 70 million people every day.

Why do you support the Mobile Area Chamber of Commerce’s Partners for Growth initiative?
“It’s a no-brainer,” said Barnes. “It is a great return on investment for not only my company, but the city as a whole and, of course, my grandchildren’s future.”

What do you see as Mobile’s greatest potential?
“The potential is within the city itself – location, port of entry, air and the eager workforce that is right here,” said Barnes. “This is just the beginning of what Mobile has. The opportunities for our city are endless.”

Length of continuous Chamber membership: Since 1960
Gov. Robert Bentley spoke with Rep. Napoleon Bracy before the Mobile Area Chamber’s annual luncheon. The event is held each year so the Chamber can overview its legislative agenda to members of the Mobile/Baldwin legislative delegation.

David Rodgers Joins the Chamber’s Economic Development Department

Mobile native David Rodgers was recently named as a project manager for the Mobile Area Chamber's economic development department. In this position, he will staff various committees, represent projects to the City of Mobile Industrial Development Board and the Mobile County Industrial Development Authority and actively work business and industrial prospects.

He previously worked as a purchasing manager for Safety Source Inc., managing an inventory valued at more than $1.2 million. Prior to that, he worked in outside sales for C.H. Robinson.

Ramona Hill Named Special Projects Manufacturing Community Coordinator

The Mobile Area Chamber and University of South Alabama (USA) selected Ramona Hill to serve as a manufacturing community coordinator. She will work in the Chamber administration division on special projects.

Bill Sisson, the Chamber’s president and CEO said, “Having someone with Ramona’s combined manufacturing and consulting background helping to give the partnership strategic direction will be invaluable to this community.”

Bill will work with USA to implement the Chamber’s and USA’s goals of developing a manufacturing community.

The economic benefits will help Mobile attract and expand investment in the manufacturing industry and increase international trade and exports, Hill said. “Receiving the manufacturing community designation has been a catalyst for thinking about opportunities that make our community strong,” Hill said. “We have been able to start conversations about efforts that could enhance our manufacturing base.”

Hill is also a certified master trainer and facilitator and CEO of Workshops Etc! Inc., a professional training and development organization. Hill can be reached at 251-431-8647.
